

► Bonanza Air Lines recently ran afoul of a new navigational hazard at Kingman Airport, Ariz.—the local Little Leagues baseball team. The boys, seeking telephone poles for lights to illuminate night games, were given permission to scout the airport for any poles not in use. Later, when the Bonanza-owned "H" marker was reported inoperative by pilots, company technicians discovered that the set was in working order but that the five poles supporting the antenna had been neatly sawed off.
